Developer - Build Platform Team

Dear Hiring Manager,

I'm applying for the Developer role on the Build Platform team. I've spent the last few years building internal tooling, and I enjoy it immensely. I like the idea of measuring the success of my initiatives against the improvements that it provides internal teams.

In my current role, I built CLI tooling that lets developers spin up full environments and database snapshots with a single command. It cut setup time by 90% and reduced production debugging from weeks to hours. I also built GitOps pipelines with Argo that gave teams consistent, repeatable deployments. The pattern was always the same: find the friction, build tooling to remove it, then help teams adopt it.

What draws me to this role is that you're solving problems I care about: containerized dev environments, better testing infrastructure, eliminating "works on my machine" issues. I've been on both sides, building the tooling and being the frustrated developer waiting for environments.

I'd be happy to talk more.

Sincerely,

Tyler Kuipers
